Questions 1 – 10

Line The Spanish established the first European settlements in the Americas beginning in the Caribbean, and by 1600, extending throughout Central and South America. Thousands of Spaniards flocked to the Americas seeking wealth and status. The most famous of these Spanish adventurers is also the most (5) controversial, Christopher Columbus, though Italian himself, explored on behalf of the Spanish monarchs.

The history of Spanish explorations begins with the history of Spain itself. During the fifteenth century, Spain hoped to gain advantage over its rival, Portugal. The marriage of Ferdinand of Aragon and Isabella of Castile in 1459 (10) unified Catholic Spain and began the process of building a nation that could compete for worldwide power. Since the 700s, much of Spain had been under the Islamic rule, and King Ferdinand II and Queen Isabella I were determined to defeat the Muslims in Granada, the last Islamic stronghold in Spain. In 1492, they completed the centuries-long Christian conquest the Spanish territory. (15) This marked another step forward in the process of making Spain a European power, and Ferdinand and Isabella were now ready to look further afield.

Their goals were to expand Catholicism and to gain a commercial advantage over Portugal. To those ends, Ferdinand and Isabella sponsored extensive Atlantic exploration. Spain's most famous explorer, Christopher (20) Columbus, was actually from Italy. He believed that using calculations based on other mariners' journey, he could chart a westward route to India, which could be used to expand European trade and spread Christianity. Starting in 1485, he approached Portuguese, English, and Spanish monarchs, asking for ships and funding to explore this westward route. All those he petitioned – including (25) Ferdinand and Isabella at first – rebuffed him; their nautical experts all concurred that Columbus' estimates of the width of the Atlantic Ocean were far too low. However, after three years of pleas, and, more importantly, the completion of the war with the Muslims, Ferdinand and Isabella agreed to finance Columbus' expedition in 1492, supplying him with three ships. The Spanish monarchs knew (30) that Portuguese mariners had reached the southern tip of Africa and sailed the Indian Ocean. They understood that the Portuguese would soon reach Asia, and in this competitive race to reach the Far East, the Spanish rulers decided to act.

Columbus held erroneous views that shaped his thinking about what he would encounter as he sailed west. He believed the earth to be much smaller than (35) its actual size, and since he did not know of the existence of the Americas, he fully expected to land in Asia. On October 12, 1492, however, he made landfall on an island in the Bahamas, south of the present-day state of Florida. He then sailed to an island he named Hispaniola (present-day Dominican Republic and Haiti). Believing he had landed in the East Indies, Columbus called the native Taínos (40) people he found there "Indios", giving rise to the term "Indian" for any native people of the New World. Upon Columbus' return to Spain, the Spanish crown bestowed on him the title of Admiral of the Ocean Sea and named him governor of the lands he had discovered. Up until the end of his life, Columbus held to his claim that the lands he had traveled to were part of the Asian continent, even (45) though there was a mounting amount of evidence that contradicted his belief.

Many other Europeans followed in Columbus' footsteps, drawn by dreams of winning wealth by sailing west. Another Italian, Amerigo Vespucci, sailing for the Portuguese crown, explored the South American coastline between 1499 and 1502. Unlike Columbus, he realized that the Americas were not part of Asia (50) but lands unknown to Europeans. Though it was not Asia, he still recognized the opportunities and wanted to share what he had learned about this new land. Vespucci's widely published accounts of his voyages fueled speculation and intense interest in the New World among Europeans. Among those who read Vespucci's reports was the German mapmaker Martin Waldseemuller. Using the (55) explorer's first name as a label for the new landmass, Waldseemuller attached "America" to his map of the New World in 1507, and the name stuck.

Line The first stage of perception involves detecting the signal that something is out there. The human eye can detect only a minute fraction, less than 1 percent, of all electromagnetic energy or the visible spectrum. Bees and butterflies can see ultraviolet rays, and some snakes can 'see' the radiant heat emitted by their (5) prey sufficiently precisely to be able to target vulnerable parts of the body when they strike. So, what we know about reality is limited by the capabilities of our sense organs.

Within those limitations, our sensitivity is remarkable: on a clear dark night, we could theoretically see a single candle flame 30 miles away. When we detect (10) a signal such as a light, our sensory receptors convert one form of energy into another, so information about the light is transmitted as a pattern of neural impulses. The raw material of perception for all the senses consists of neural impulses which are channeled to differently specialized parts of the brain. For the impulses to be interpreted as seeing a candle flame, they have to reach the (15) visual cortex, and the pattern and rate of firing in activated cells and lack of firing in inhibited cells has both to be distinguished from the background level of cellular activity (or neural noise), and decoded.

Interestingly, the ability to detect a signal accurately is far more variable than would be expected from knowledge about sensory systems alone, and (20) is influenced by many other factors: some are obvious, like attention, others less obvious, involving our expectations, motivations, or inclinations, such as a tendency to say 'yes' or 'no' when uncertain. If you are listening to the radio while waiting for an important phone call, you may think you heard it ring when it did not, whereas if you are engrossed in the radio program and not expecting a call (25) you may completely fail to hear it ring. Such differences in detecting signals have important practical implications, for example in designing effective warning systems in intensive care units or control panels for complex machines.

Theories constructed to explain these findings enable psychologists to make and to test predictions. Signal detection theory suggests that accurate (30) perception is determined not just by sensory capacity but by a combination of sensory processes and decision processes. Decisions vary according to the degree of cautiousness required (or response bias) in use at the time. A laboratory technician scanning slides for cancerous cells responds to every anomaly and sorts out the 'false alarms' later, but a driver deciding when to overtake the car (35) in front must get it right each time or risk a collision. Measures of sensitivity and of cautiousness can be calculated by counting 'hit rates' and 'false alarms', and applying relatively simple statistical procedures to predict when a signal, whether it is a cancerous cell or an oncoming car, will be accurately detected. These measures have many practical uses, for example in training people to (40) monitor baggage screening devices at airports.

All senses respond better to changes in the environment than to a steady state, and receptors stop responding altogether, or habituate, when nothing changes, so you notice the noise of the fridge when it switches on but not later. In our busy lives one might suppose that rest from sensory stimulation would (45) be a boon, but sensory deprivation (or the absence of all sensory stimulation) can prevent frightening and bizarre experiences including hallucinations in some people. The degree of distress experienced varies according to what people expect. The same applies if the senses are overloaded for a significant length of time such as at pop concerts or football matches. These can be exhausting as (50) well as stimulating experiences.

Questions 21 – 30

Line Meteors are tiny solid particles that enter Earth's atmosphere from interplanetary space. Since the particles move at speeds of many kilometers per second, friction with the air vaporizes them at altitudes between 80 and 130 kilometers. The resulting flashes of light fade out within a few seconds. These (5) "shooting stars" got their name because at night their luminous vapors look like stars moving rapidly across the sky. Some meteorites do end up landing on Earth's surface. It was not until the time when meteorites were measured and their compositions analyzed in detail that scientists appreciated their true significance. The meteorites include the oldest and most primitive materials (10) available for direct study in the laboratory.

The average age for the most primitive meteorites, calculated using the most accurate values now available for radioactive half-lives, is 4.5 billion years. This value is taken to represent the age of the solar system—the time since the first solids condensed and began to form into larger bodies.

(15) Meteorites are often classified between primitive and differentiated meteorites. The differentiated meteorites are fragments of larger parent bodies that were molten before they broke up, allowing the denser materials (such as metals) to sink to their centers. Like many rocks on Earth, they have been subject to a degree of chemical reshuffling, with the different materials sorted according (20) to density. Differentiated meteorites include the irons, which come from the metal cores of their parent bodies; stony-irons, which probably originate in regions between a metal core and a stony mantle; and some stones that are composed of mantle or crust material from their differentiated parent bodies.

For information on the earliest history of the solar system, we turn to (25) the primitive meteorites—those made of materials that have not been subject to great heat or pressure since their formation. We can look at the spectrum of sunlight reflected from asteroids and compare their compositions with those of primitive meteorites. Such analysis indicates that their parent bodies are almost certainly asteroids. Since asteroids are believed to be fragments left over from (30) the formation process of the solar system, it makes sense that they should be the parent bodies of the primitive meteorites.

The great majority of the meteorites that reach Earth are primitive stones. Many of them are composed of light-colored gray silicates with some metallic grains mixed in. Some have been more helpful than others in providing (35) information about the solar system. Among the most useful of these meteorites have been the Allende meteorite that fell in Mexico, the Murchison meteorite that fell in Australia, and the Tagish Lake meteorite that landed in a winter snowdrift on Tagish Lake, Canada, in 2000.

The Murchison meteorite is known for the variety of organic chemicals (40) it has yielded. Most of the carbon compounds in carbonaceous meteorites are complex, tar-like substances that defy exact analysis. Murchison also contains 16 amino acids (the building blocks of proteins), 11 of which are rare on Earth. The most prominent thing about these organic molecules is that they include equal numbers with right-handed and left-handed molecular symmetry. Amino acids (45) can have either kind of symmetry, but all life on Earth has evolved using only the left-handed versions to make proteins. The presence of both kinds of amino acids clearly demonstrates that the ones in the meteorites had an extraterrestrial origin.

These naturally occurring amino acids and other complex organic (50) molecules in Murchison—formed without the benefit of the sheltering environment of planet Earth—show that a great deal of interesting chemistry must have taken place when the solar system was forming. If so, then perhaps some of the molecular building blocks of life on Earth were first delivered by primitive meteorites and comets. This is an interesting idea because our planet (55) was probably much too hot for any organic materials to survive its earliest history. But after Earth's surface cooled the asteroid and comet fragments that pelted it could have refreshed its supply of organic materials.

Questions 31 – 40

Line Paleontologists have argued for a long time that the demise of the dinosaurs was caused by climatic alterations associated with slow changes in the positions of continents and seas resulting from plate tectonics. Off and on throughout the Cretaceous (the last period of the Mesozoic era, during which dinosaurs (5) flourished), large shallow seas covered extensive areas of the continents. Data from diverse sources, including geochemical evidence preserved in seafloor sediments, indicate that the Late Cretaceous climate was milder than today. The days were not too hot, nor the nights too cold. The summers were not too warm, nor the winters too frigid. The shallow seas on the continents probably buffered (10) the temperature of the nearby air, keeping it relatively constant.

At the end of the Cretaceous, the geological record shows that these seaways retreated from the continents back into the major ocean basins. No one knows why. Over a period of about 100,000 years, while the seas pulled back, climates around the world became dramatically more extreme: warmer (15) days, cooler nights; hotter summers, colder winters. Perhaps dinosaurs could not tolerate these extreme temperature changes and became vanished.

If true, though, why did cold-blooded animals such as snakes, lizards, turtles, and crocodiles survive the freezing winters and torrid summers? These animals are at the mercy of the climate to maintain a livable body temperature. (20) It's hard to understand why they would not be affected, whereas dinosaurs were left too crippled to cope, especially if, as some scientists believe, dinosaurs were warm-blooded. Critics also point out that the shallow seaways had retreated from and advanced on the continents numerous times during the Mesozoic, so why did the dinosaurs survive the climatic changes associated with the earlier (25) fluctuations but not with this one? Although initially appealing, the hypothesis of a simple climatic change related to sea levels is insufficient to explain all the data.

Dissatisfaction with conventional explanations for dinosaur extinctions led to a surprising observation that, in turn, has suggested a new hypothesis. Many (30) plants and animals disappear abruptly from the fossil record as one moves from layers of rock documenting the end of the Cretaceous up into rocks representing the beginning of the Cenozoic (the era after the Mesozoic). Between the last layer of Cretaceous rock and the first layer of Cenozoic rock, there is often a thin layer of clay. Scientists felt that they could get an idea of how long the extinctions (35) took by determining how long it took to deposit this one centimeter of clay, and they thought they could determine the time it took to deposit the clay by determining the amount of the element iridium (Ir) it contained.

Ir has not been common at Earth's surface since the very beginning of the planet's history. Because it usually exists in a metallic state, it was preferentially (40) incorporated in Earth's core as the planet cooled and consolidated. Ir is found in high concentrations in some meteorites, in which the solar system's original chemical composition is preserved. Even today, microscopic meteorites continually bombard Earth, falling on both land and sea. By measuring how many of these meteorites fall to Earth over a given period of time, scientists can (45) estimate how long it might have taken to deposit the observed amount of Ir in the boundary clay. These calculations suggest that a period of about one million years would have been required. However, other reliable evidence suggests that the deposition of the boundary clay could not have taken one million years. Consequently, the idea that the Ir in the boundary clay came from microscopic (50) meteorites cannot be accepted. So, the unusually high concentration of Ir seems to require a special explanation.

In view of these facts, scientists hypothesized that a single large asteroid, about 10 to 15 kilometers across, collided with Earth, and the resulting fallout created the boundary clay. Their calculations show that the impact kicked up a (55) dust cloud that cut off sunlight for several months, inhibiting photosynthesis in plants; decreased surface temperatures on continents to below freezing; caused extreme episodes of acid rain; and significantly raised long-term global temperatures through the greenhouse effect. This disruption of the food chain and climate would have eradicated the dinosaurs and other organisms in less (60) than fifty years.

Questions 41 – 50

Line In seeking to describe the origins of theater, one must rely primarily on speculation, since there is little concrete evidence on which to draw. The most widely accepted theory, championed by anthropologists in the late nineteenth and early twentieth century, envisions theater as emerging out of myth and ritual.
(5) The process perceived by these anthropologists may be summarized briefly. During the early stages of its development, a society becomes aware of forces that appear to influence or control its food supply and well-being. Having little understanding of natural causes, it attributes both desirable and undesirable occurrences to supernatural or magical forces, and it searches for means to win
(10) the favor of these forces. Perceiving an apparent connection between certain actions performed by the group and the result it desires, the group repeats, refines, and formalizes those actions into fixed ceremonies, or rituals.

Stories (myths) may then grow up around a ritual. Frequently the myths include representatives of those supernatural forces that the rites celebrate or
(15) hope to influence. Performers may wear costumes and masks to represent the mythical characters or supernatural forces in the rituals or in accompanying celebrations. As people become more sophisticated, its conceptions of supernatural forces and causal relationships may change. As a result, it may abandon or modify some rites. But the myths that have grown up around the
(20) rites may continue as part of the group's oral tradition and may even come to be acted out under conditions divorced from these rites. When this occurs, the first step has been taken toward theater as an autonomous activity, and thereafter entertainment and aesthetic values may gradually replace the former mystical and socially efficacious concerns.

(25) Although origin in ritual has long been the most popular, it is by no means the only theory about how the theater came into being. Storytelling has been proposed as one alternative. To enhance their listeners' enjoyment, storytellers continually make their stories more engaging and memorable. Under this theory, relating and listening to stories are seen as fundamental human pleasures. Thus,
(30) the recalling of an event (a hunt, battle, or other feat) is elaborated through the narrator's pantomime and impersonation and eventually through each role being assumed by a different person. A closely related theory sees theater as evolving out of dances that are primarily pantomimic, rhythmical or gymnastic, or from imitations of animal noises and sounds. Admiration for the performer's
(35) skill, virtuosity, and grace are seen as motivation for elaborating the activities into fully realized theatrical performances.

In addition to exploring the possible antecedents of theater, scholars have also theorized about the motives that led people to develop theater. Why did theater develop, and why was it valued after it ceased to fulfill the function of (40) ritual? Most answers fall back on the theories about the human mind and basic human needs. One, set forth by Aristotle in the fourth century B.C. sees humans as naturally imitative as they taking pleasure in imitating persons, things, and actions and in seeing such imitations. Another, advanced in the twentieth century, suggests that humans have a gift for fantasy, through which they seek (45) to reshape reality into more satisfying forms than those encountered in daily life. Thus, fantasy or fiction (of which drama is one form) permits people to objectify their anxieties and fears, confront them, and fulfill their hopes in fiction if not fact. The theater, then, is one tool whereby people define a world or escape from unpleasant realities.

(50) But neither the human imitative instinct nor a penchant for fantasy by itself leads to an autonomous theater. Therefore, additional explanations are needed. One necessary condition seems to be a somewhat detached view of human problems. For example, one sign of this condition is the appearance of the comic vision, since comedy requires sufficient detachment to view (55) some deviations from social norms as ridiculous rather than as serious threats to the welfare of the entire group. Another condition that contributes to the development of autonomous theater is the emergence of the aesthetic sense. For example, some early societies ceased to consider certain rites essential to their well-being and abandoned them. Nevertheless, they retained as parts of (60) their oral tradition the myths that had grown up around the rites and admired them for their artistic qualities rather than for their religious usefulness.

Hello and welcome to English Speaking Master. Many students ask that one question about language learning: What makes a good language learner? I said you should talk more in your target language. How do we do that? Here is the ultimate tip.

Do group activities. Language is used to communicate with other people, and the best way to communicate is to find your crowd. You can't communicate in Arabic with people who only know Spanish in the same way you can't communicate in English without people who know how to do that. This community is made for that reason. Learn and practice together with confidence will do so much to understand a language. Don't be afraid to talk and make mistakes because it is normal to get things wrong, or different.

Now, details for today's discussion will be presented by my friend. Ariana, if you please come forward.

QUESTION 2

DIRECTIONS

In this question, you will be asked to talk about a familiar topic. After you hear the question, you will have 30 seconds to prepare your response and 45 seconds to speak. Your response will be scored on your ability to speak clearly and coherently about the topic.

You are appointed as the guide for international student exchange. Which of the following activities would be the most interesting to show them—visiting a museum, participating in local events, diving into local cuisine?

Choose one and explain why. Give specific reasons and details in your response.

QUESTION 4

After you hear the question, you will have 45 seconds to prepare your response and 60 seconds to speak. You may take notes while you listen, and you may use your notes to help prepare your response. Your response will be scored on your ability to speak clearly and coherently.

Listen to a conversation between two people. As you listen, think about – what problem are they discussing. What are the two solutions they talk about?

M : Hello. Jake's speaking.
W : Hi, Jake. It's Ellen. Sorry to disturb you but I really have to verify – is it true that we are going to the office tomorrow?
M : Oh, yeah. The boss decided to have a year-end evaluation tomorrow at the office since we have been working remotely for far too long this year.
W : I guess so… but the thing is… I lost my data for the meeting.
M : What do you mean by "lost the data"?
W : Well, I accidentally spilled water on my laptop and it's not working till now.
M : No way. Are you kidding?
W : I really hope I was, but right now I'm in the service center and kind of panic when I saw the group chat about meeting up tomorrow.

M : Yeah, even I think I didn't think it was going to be tomorrow. But, what about your laptop? Is the data saved? Can it be retrieved?

W : They said it will take 3 days and they'll try to retrieve the data. Now I'm mad at myself for never using cloud manager for the past 3 months.

M : Well, let this be a lesson from now on. Then? How about your presentation for the meeting?

W : Well, I'm trying to remember it. I'm going to make it from scratch as soon as I get home.

M : Don't you think you need to tell the boss about this incident?

W : Do you think he'd mind?

M : Well, I do know you can't retrieve all your data just by remembering it.

W : I was thinking maybe it'd be better if I say anything about it tomorrow before the meeting…

M : You do know tomorrow is the annual meeting, right? Surely, he would mind if any of us didn't take this seriously.

Now, talk about what the woman should do. In your response, briefly describe the problem. Talk about which solution you prefer and explain why.

PART B

Questions 31 – 35: Listen to a conversation between a student and an advisor.

W : Hi, Mr. Sanders. I'm sorry for coming early when we were supposed to meet an hour again.
M : It's no big deal, Sarah. So, tell me, what's going on? Do you want to apply for a job?
W : Yeah. Well, I was thinking that if I don't start working toward paying my student loans now, I'm going to feel the burden after graduation. So, I was hoping I would be joined the Work and Study Program, and get a job on campus.

M : That's a great idea. We can sign you up for the program. Here, you can take a look at the form. The job offered for the work-study programs is only part-time. So, you would have enough time to your study. You can either apply for a job that requires 10 hours a week or 20 hours a week. I suggest you start 10 hours a week, so you don't overload yourself.

W : Well, I think I'd rather work 20 hours a week. I mean, I want to make money faster and pay my loan as quickly as possible.

M : It's good thinking in your head. But considering you are a freshman with a full class schedule, it wouldn't be wise to increase your workload so much.

W : But I'm a hard worker thou. I'm determined to balance my work and study.

M : And I'm sure you are. But if your grade slip, you might not be qualified for your current scholarship next year.

W : Oh… Well, I don't want that to happen. It will put me in more debt. Okay. So, what exactly do you recommend?

M : I'm going to permit you for 10 hours a week to work-study program. I will sign this form and then you can take it to the Job Centre. They will help you find a job there. Make sure you left the notes for a Work and Study Position since we have jobs reserved for those students. Once you find the job and work for a little bit, see how it will go. And then we can discuss giving you more hours.

W : Okay, sounds like a plan. Thanks for your help.

31. Why does the student want to meet with the advisor?
32. Why does the student want to work twenty hours a week?
33. Why does the advisor mention the student's current scholarship?
34. What solution does the advisor give to the student?
35. What will the student do after the conversation?

Questions 36 – 40: Listen to a conversation between a student and a teacher's assistant.

W : Hello. You are John, the TA for Professor Adams in the Literature class, right?

M : Yeah, that's me.

W : I'm signed up for that class, but you didn't see me on the first day because I was sick. My friend is in it though. So, she filled me in.

M : Oh, sorry to hear about that. Did your friend tell you about the first assignment?

W : Yeah, she did. I believe we have to write a paper on the first couple of chapters of our chosen book, right?

M : That's the one.

W : Well, now that I run into you, I was wondering… you are also the TA for Professor Adams' Shakespeare class, right? I was thinking of taking the class next semester.

M : Aren't you a freshman? You have to wait until next year to sign up for the class.
W : No, I'm a sophomore. But I switched my major which is why I'm just taking Professor Adams' Literature class this year.
M : Oh, okay, sorry.
W : That's okay. Anyways, I was wondering what you think about the class in terms of workload because I'll be taking extra credit next semester and I don't want to be overwhelmed, but I also really like Shakespeare.
M : Well, in my opinion, the class is really fun as I'm sure you've heard, but it's also a lot of work. You need to do a lot of reading or you quickly fall behind the class.
W : Hmm, I mean, yeah, it sounds like an awesome class, but I'm worried that I wouldn't be able to make the most of it if I'm taking so many other classes.
M : Well, you could always sign up and see how it goes in the first two weeks. If it seems like too much, you can drop the class and take it next year when you have more time.
W : That's a good idea. I forgot we have a couple of weeks to make changes to our schedule after the semester starts. I'll be sure to sign up for the class next semester then.
M : Cool. I hope you like it.
W : Me too. See you in the class next week.

36. What does the student want to talk to the TA about?

PART C

Question 41 – 45: Listen to a monologue delivered by a man

So, I would like to continue our discussion about the moon, more particularly about the origins of the moon and how it was created. There are three possible theories about how the moon was created.

The first one is the capture theory because it's the easiest one to reject. Its primary drawback is that no one knows of any way that early Earth could have captured such a large moon from elsewhere. One body approaching another cannot go into orbit around it without a serious loss of energy. Furthermore, if such a capture did take place, the captured object would go into a very strange orbit rather than the nearly circular orbit our moon goes through today. Finally, there are too many similarities in composition between Earth and the moon. It's much more likely that the Earth and the moon were somehow connected at one point in the past.

The second is the fission theory suggests that the moon separated from the Earth, but modern calculations have shown that this type of splitting is nearly impossible. Furthermore, it is difficult to understand how a moon made of materials from the Earth could have developed so many chemical differences from our own.

The last, the sister theory, was the dominant idea accepted by most astronomers in the past. But, like the capture and fission theory, it had some problems, particularly when trying to explain how it could have such a lower density when compared to the Earth. Now, to resolve these apparent contradictions, scientists developed a fourth hypothesis for the origin of the moon, one that involves a giant impact early in Earth's history.

This idea, known as the giant impact hypothesis, proposes that Earth was struck by an object approximately one-tenth of Earth's mass, which is about the size of Mars. This is very nearly the largest impact Earth could experience without being shattered. Such an impact would disrupt much of Earth and eject a vast amount of material into space, releasing almost enough energy to break the planet apart. Computer simulations indicate that material totaling several percent of Earth's mass could be ejected in such an impact. Most of this material would be from the stony mantles of Earth and the impacting body, not from their metal cores. This ejected rock would then cool and form a ring of material orbiting Earth. It was this ring that ultimately came together and formed the moon.

While we do not have any current way of showing that the giant impact hypothesis is the correct model of the moon's origin, it does offer potential solutions to most of the major problems raised by the chemistry of the moon. Most importantly, since the moon's raw material is from the deep rocks of Earth and the asteroid that hit it, the composition and chemistry of the moon are better understood and explained.

41. What is the professor mainly discussed?
42. What is the problem with the capture theory?
43. What does the professor imply about the sister theory?
44. Why is the problem with the giant impact hypothesis?
45. Which theory about the moon is most likely true?

Question 46 – 50: Listen to a monologue delivered by a man

Have you ever had trouble sleeping? You slept during the morning and awake during the night. The cycle keeps going over and over.

Interestingly, our bodies have an internal clock called circadian rhythm. It's acknowledged as the time for our body to sleep and wake through the light and dark of the sun.

But then we started to have artificial light everywhere, including our phone with its blue light.

Nowadays, many people have difficulty getting sleep, and this leads to sleep debt. A person with a sleep debt does not get sufficient sleep on a chronic basis. The consequences of sleep debt include decreased levels of alertness and mental efficiency. Interestingly, since the advent of electric light, the amount of sleep that people get has declined. While we certainly welcome the convenience of having the darkness lit up, we also suffer the consequences of reduced amounts of sleep because we are more active during the nighttime hours than our ancestors were. As a result, many of us sleep less than 7–8 hours a night and accumulate sleep debt.

If you lie down to take a nap and fall asleep very easily, chances are you may have a sleep debt. Given that college students are famous for suffering from significant sleep debt, chances are you and your classmates deal with these issues regularly.

Sleep debt and sleep deprivation have significant negative psychological and physiological consequences. As mentioned earlier, lack of sleep can result in decreased mental alertness and cognitive function. In addition, sleep deprivation often results in depression-like symptoms. These effects can occur as a function of accumulated sleep debt or in response to more acute periods of sleep deprivation. It may surprise you to know that sleep deprivation is associated with obesity, increased blood pressure, increased levels of stress, and reduced immune functioning. A sleep-deprived individual generally will fall asleep more quickly than if they were not sleep deprived. Some sleep-deprived individuals have difficulty staying awake when they stop moving, for example sitting and watching television or driving a car. That is why individuals suffering from sleep deprivation can also put themselves and others at risk when they go behind the wheel of a car or work with dangerous machinery. Some research suggests that sleep deprivation affects cognitive and motor function as much as if not more than, alcohol intoxication.

The amount of sleep we get varies across our lives. When we are very young, we spend up to 16 hours a day sleeping. As we grow older, we sleep less. Recent research indicates that by the time we are 65 years old, we average fewer than 7 hours of sleep per day. As the amount of time, we sleep varies over our lifespan, presumably the sleep debt would adjust accordingly.

46. What is the lecture mainly about?
47. Why does the professor start the lecture talking about circadian rhythms?
48. Why does the professor mention college students in the lecture?
49. What does the professor imply about the dangers of sleep deprivation?
50. What is one of the indicators that you might suffer from sleep debt?

Kata Kunci : Data from diverse sources, including geochemical evidence preserved in seafloor sediments, indicate that the Late Cretaceous climate was milder than today

Pembahasan : Pilihan C tidak tepat, karena terdapat kalimat, "The shallow seas on the continents probably buffered the temperature of the nearby air, keeping it relatively constant" (Laut dangkal di benua mungkin menyangga suhu udara di dekatnya, membuatnya relative konstan). Pilihan D tidak tepat, karena terdapat kalimat, "The summers were not too warm, nor the winters too frigid." Pilihan B tidak tepat, karena terdapat kalimat, "Data from diverse sources, including geochemical evidence preserved in seafloor sediments, indicate that the Late Cretaceous climate was milder than today" (Data dari berbagai sumber, termasuk bukti geokimia yang diawetkan dalam sedimen dasar laut, menunjukkan bahwa iklim zaman Kapur Akhir lebih sejuk daripada iklim saat ini). Pembahasan : Kata "vanish" terdapat dalam kalimat, "Perhaps dinosaurs could not tolerate these extreme temperature changes and became vanished" (Mungkin dinosaurus tidak bisa mentolerir perubahan suhu yang ekstrim ini dan menghilang). Kata "vanish" kurang tepat untuk menggambarkan dinosaurus yang punah, maka diperlukan kata yang bermakna "punah." Kata yang tepat adalah B "Extinct."

35. Jawab : D ➲ To question the hypothesis about climate change and the demise of dinosaurs

Kata Kunci : It's hard to understand why they would not be affected, whereas dinosaurs were left too crippled to cope, especially if, as some scientists believe, dinosaurs were warm-blooded

Pembahasan : Dalam paragraf ketiga disebutkan keberadaan hewan berdarah dingin setelah paragraf kedua yang menyebutkan perubahan iklim karena laut yang mungkin menjadi alasan punahnya dinosaurus. Namun, penulis mengungkapkan keraguan akan hipotesis tersebut dengan menyebutkan hewan berdarah dingin yang tetap hidup melewati musim dingin paling beku dan musim panas paling terik, sementara menurut beberapa peneliti dinosaurus kemungkinan berdarah panas atau memiliki suhu tubuh sendiri (It's hard to understand why they would not be affected, whereas dinosaurs were left too crippled to cope, especially if, as some scientists believe, dinosaurs were warm-blooded). Ini berarti hewan berdarah dingin disebutkan untuk mempertanyakan hipotesis tersebut. Jadi, jawaban yang tepat adalah "To question the hypothesis about the climate change and the demise of dinosaurs."

Kata Kunci : Many plants and animals disappear abruptly from the fossil record as one moves from layers of rock documenting the end of the Cretaceous up into rocks representing the beginning of the Cenozoic

Pembahasan : Dalam paragraf keempat disebutkan adanya pengamatan lebih lanjut terkait kepunahan dinosaurus dan peneliti menemukan fakta bahwa banyak tumbuhan dan hewan yang fosilnya menghilang dari catatan dokumentasi era Kapur akhir ternyata ada dalam batuan era Kenozoikum awal. Para peneliti berpendapat bahwa mereka dapat mengetahui berapa lama kepunahan berlangsung dengan menentukan lama waktu yang dbutuhkan untuk mengendapkan satu sentimeter tanah liat yang memiliki unsur iridium. Ini berarti tanaman dan hewan era Mesozoic dipastikan ada dalam era Kenozoikum. Jadi, jawaban yang tepat adalah B "Plants and animals from the Mesozoic era were unable to survive in the Cenozoic era."

38. Jawab : D ➲ It will take many years ahead to understand the element iridium

Kata Kunci : So, the unusually high concentration of Ir seems to require a special explanation

Pembahasan : Paragraf kelima menceritakan tentang unsur iridium yang tidak umum ada di permukaan bumi. Unsur berkonsentrasi tinggi ini di ditemukan dalam beberapa meteorit yang jatuh ke bumi. Para peneliti berharap dapat menghitung berapa lama waktu yang diperlukan untuk menyimpan sejumlah iridium dalam tanah liat di bumi, tapi teori ini dibantah karena memerlukan waktu lebih dari satu juta tahun bagi iridium untuk mengendap. Kalimat akhir paragraf kelima menyebutkan, "So, the unusually high concentration of Ir seems to require a special explanation" (Jadi, konsentrasi Ir yang luar biasa tinggi tampaknya memerlukan penjelasan khusus). Ini berarti unsur iridium dalam fosil masih belum dapat dipastikan asalnya. Jadi, jawaban yang tepat adalah D "It will take many years ahead to understand the element iridium."

41. Jawab : C ➲ The origins of theater

Kata Kunci : In seeking to describe the origins of theater, one must rely primarily on speculation, since there is little concrete evidence on which to draw (paragraph 1); Although origin in ritual has long been the most popular, it is by no means the only theory about how the theater came into being (paragraph 3); In addition to exploring the possible antecedents of theater, scholars have also theorized about the motives that led people to develop theater (paragraph 5)

Pembahasan : Kalimat pertama dalam paragraf pertama tersebut menyebutkan tentang awal mula teater, yaitu dalam kalimat, "In seeking to describe the origins of theater, one must rely primarily on speculation, since there is little concrete evidence on which to draw" (Dalam mengupayakan untuk menggambarkan asal-usul teater, seseorang harus mengandalkan spekulasi, karena hanya ada sedikit bukti nyata yang dapat ditarik). PEMBAHASAN SPEAKING

Listen to an announcement. You may read along as you listen. Then read the announcement aloud.

Hello and welcome to English Speaking Master. Many students ask that one question about language learning: What makes a good language learner? I said you should talk more in your target language. How do we do that? Here is the ultimate tip.

Do group activities. Language is used to communicate with other people, and the best way to communicate is to find your crowd. You can't communicate in Arabic with people who only know Spanish in the same way you can't communicate in English without people who know how to do that. This community is made for that reason. Learn and practice together with confidence will do so much to understand a language. Don't be afraid to talk and make mistakes because it is normal to get things wrong, or different.

Now, details for today's discussion will be presented by my friend. Ariana, if you please come forward.

QUESTION 2

I definitely prefer to dive into local cuisine as soon as possible. I believe food is the easiest way to experience cultural exchange because different culture requires different customs in each country. Local food offers a deeper insight into a culture, for example, the Japanese tend to utter a phrase to thank the meal before diving into eating while South Koreans make sure the seniors and elders eat first. I remember when I was fascinated learning about the customs of both countries and got curious about their other eating habits, culture, and stuff. I would like to bring international students to eat various Indonesian cuisine starting with rice and different side dishes for each meal. It will be a good experience for those who are not used to spices and it may lead them to learn more about our habit in eating and the culture behind it.

I think I would find ways to enjoy my stay in the new city or country. I believe homesickness is caused by the feeling of loneliness in a new city or country, especially at the start of moving to a new place. It is better to navigate the new place by looking for various dining places, local libraries, or entertainment spaces. It is also important to look for new friends whom we can ask to join the adventure of discovering a new place. Being adventurous is a must because I have to make the most of my stay for studying at university. I can imagine there will be moments when I miss my parents or my old friends in my hometown, but if it is not possible for me to visit them cost-wise, I can still call or message them.

Jawab:
Based on the conversation, the man and woman are working in the same company and they are going to have a meeting tomorrow. Unfortunately, the woman lost the data for the meeting due to some accident and asked the man for his opinion. I think the woman should contact her boss about the accident. According to the man, tomorrow's meeting is the annual meeting thus it is important to bring the essential materials. It will be better if she tells the boss that he has a say to reschedule the meeting while waiting for her laptop to be repaired. Moreover, there is no guarantee that the woman can remember all the details about her work in a day. It won't be good for her reputation. I think she should not waste time by guessing and go talk to the boss for further instruction.
